ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The more Jamie Moyer threw off-speed pitches, the more he kept the Texas Rangers off-balance.

Moyer extended his scoreless-inning streak to 20, shutting down Texas before tiring in the Baltimore Orioles' 6-3 victory yesterday.

The Orioles ended a four-game losing streak to Texas in which they were outscored 40-15. In the last loss in that streak, Texas tied a team record with five home runs, including three by Juan Gonzalez, in an 11-1 romp Saturday night.

But Moyer (10-6) did not give up a run until the seventh inning. He allowed only five singles against the team that leads the majors in homers, and set a career-high for scoreless innings.

Moyer struck out five and walked one. He became the first Orioles left-hander to win 10 or more games in a season since Jeff Ballard won 18 in 1989.

"They swung at some bad pitches and they've got some guys who can swing the bats," Moyer said. "These guys can hurt you anywhere in the lineup. The big thing was making them hit the ball on the ground."

The Rangers have faced four consecutive lefties and will see another — Frank Viola — when they open a three-game series in Boston on Monday. Texas is 13-15 against left-handed starters.

"We've seen too many of these types of left-handed pitchers," an agitated Rangers manager Kevin Kennedy said. "Give Moyer credit, he pitched well. But there's no excuse. We should have had better at-bats, especially at this point of the season."

Cal Ripken and Mark Parent homered for Baltimore, which had lost 10 of its last 11 road games.

Texas scored in the seventh on singles by Julio Franco and Dean

Palmer, a double steal and Donald Harris' RBI groundout.

Singles by Gary Redus and Ivan Rodriguez leading off the eighth finished Moyer with the Orioles in front 6-1. Gonzalez hit an RBI single and another run scored when Ripken's throw on a double play relay skipped into the Rangers dugout.

"He had pinpoint control and changes in his speeds today," Orioles manager Johnny Gates said of Moyer. "The last three games he's started have been almost identical. I saw him have outstanding command of all his pitches."

After losing his first three outings with the Orioles, Moyer is 10-3 in his last 17 starts.

"I know darned well I'm not a power pitcher," Moyer said. "If I get eight or 10 strikeouts in a game fine, but I don't go out looking for that."

Ripken's 23rd homer of the year leading off the second gave the Orioles a 1-0 lead.

Tim Lincecum singled with one out in the fourth, advanced to third when the ball got past Gonzalez in left field and scored on David Segui's single.

Brady Anderson opened the fifth. (See ORIOLES, Page B4)

'Knowledge' helps winners in 10-mile run

By JOE GROSS

Knowing the course of the Annapolis Ten Mile Run is of the utmost importance to the top runners in the field.

Jerry Clapper, who won the 18th running of the event, knows the course very well. So does Donna Moore, the women's champion. Each had run the event many times before yesterday's humidity-slowed run. Each assured that their knowledge of the course was critical.

Clapper finished in 52 minutes and one second, a full 30 seconds ahead of second-place Steve Clarke. Moore crossed the finish line in front of Navy-Marine Corps Memorial Stadium one hour, one minute and one second after the starting gun sounded. She was one minute and one second ahead of Cynthia Carpenter.

"It's two different races; the first half and the second half," Moore said. "I breeze through the first four miles, knowing the hills are coming. The first four miles are great. It's pretty as you run through Annapolis and you can't help but to run fairly fast. The secret is that you can't run the first four miles as fast as you think you can because you have nothing left when you get to the hills that start after the four-mile mark."

"I've run this race so many times that I know the first hill always kicks me back. I usually run very close to the same splits until I get to that hill, then I'm about 20 seconds off," Moore explained. "That usually puts negative thoughts in my head."

Clapper had virtually the same things to say about the course and told how he enjoys the race.

"It's a nice course. The first half is flat and fast and the second five is hilly and challenging," Clapper said. "It's a good race."

Because he knew the lay of the land, Clapper went out slower than some less knowledgeable. And that, he explained, paid off in his second Annapolis win.

"The guy who got second was out a ways, about 30 seconds ahead at five miles, then there was a small pack I was in. That's when I started going," said the Columbia resident who had finished in this event four times. "Doug Mock was the only one who went with me."

"We slowly gained on (Clarke) and at eight miles, at a flat section after a downhill, I pushed as hard as I could. I gained a lot on the guy who was ahead and I broke Doug at the same time," Clapper related. "Then I sewed it up from there."

Clapper talked about the paradoxical conditions of the course. The wind that slowed him running along the water, yet felt good blowing in his face. Then came the pain of running the hilly portion of the race, but the better feeling of running in shade that cooled the heat of the day.

"I ran Saturday at about the same time of the day and it was so humid that I didn't know what would happen if it was the same way (yesterday)," Clapper said.

He said that although it was very humid, it wasn't as bad as on Saturday morning and that helped him to the victory. Moore was equally pleased that the weather "broke" even the very little bit it did.

"I was nervous the whole time," Moore said. "I didn't know if the heat was going to jump on my back or not. (On Saturday), when it was so hot and humid, I was dreading running the race."

"Actually, I run every day at lunch time, so I'm pretty accustomed to heat. And, I've been doing a lot of hill training," Moore said. "I knew that if the heat didn't become too much of a factor, I could put it together."

Tar Heels rough up Trojans, Robinson

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — North Carolina, with a long tradition of outstanding tailbacks, spoiled John Robinson's return as coach at the school with a great history at that position.

Leon Johnson and Curtis Johnson combined for 172 yards rushing and the 20th-ranked Tar Heels beat No. 18 Southern Cal 31-9 in the Pigskin Classic last night, Robinson's first game back with the Trojans after a 10-year absence.

When Natrone Means departed early for the NFL last season, North Carolina coach Mack Brown needed a replacement for the 1,000-yard rusher. He has two.

The Johnsons, who are not related, took over with big rushing games as Leon, a redshirt freshman, ran for 94 yards on 10 carries and Curtis, a sophomore, added 78 on 17.

"We had some big plays from our tailbacks, which was a concern coming in," Brown said.

Brown won his fifth season opener in six years at North Carolina; the Tar Heels have won 20 of their last 24 opening games.

"Hopefully this game will give us national recognition," Brown said. "At North Carolina people talk about tradition and we have trouble getting our name mentioned in that group."

Robinson's plan to reinstate the Trojans' famed running game ran into an immediate snag.

Sophomore Dwight McFadden, the team's best rusher, broke his left ankle late in the first quarter. He will undergo surgery and be out for three months. McFadden gained 44 yards on seven carries.

"The loss of Dwight McFadden was a real blow to us," Robinson said. "We really didn't recover from that."

McFadden's backup, Scott Fields, managed just 18 yards on seven carries. Converted tailback Deon Strother caught five passes for 50 yards and rushed for 13 yards on four carries.

Freshman David Dotson was inserted midway through the fourth quarter and finished as the leading rusher with 48 yards on nine carries.

"We had the tailback tryouts out there," Robinson said.

Another Trojan left the game in the first quarter. Safety Mike Salmon, brother of California Angels outfielder Tim Salmon, bruised his left shoulder and did not return.

North Carolina was helped by injuries and penalties to Southern Cal, but the Tar Heels also dominated a Trojan offensive line that averages 6-foot-5½ and 283 pounds.

"Our biggest asset was our ability to play a very physical game,"

Keeping local flavor holds good taste of run

The Annapolis Ten Mile Run is very special to this area. Despite having runners from 24 states, it is a uniquely local event.

It started when five local residents, then considered sort of foolish for wanting to run 10 miles from Severna Park High School to the Annapolis City Dock.

The general populace wasn't into running yet. That made no difference. The five pioneers ran most of the distance on the Ritchie Highway shoulder. John Ashe, who would later be elected to the State House of Representatives, was the winner of that first run. He was all but lost in the field of some 3,500 runners yesterday.

But very many of the people ahead of and behind Ashe were from this region — and very many reside right in or around Annapolis.

The Annapolis Striders, an organization that grew out of the Ten Mile Run, have never gone so far as to invite high-priced foreign runners who might bring greater publicity to the run.

So many races that started as local events have exploded into monstrous races with 30,000 or

SPORTS COMMENT

By JOE GROSS

45,000 or even 60,000 runners entered. The money from the entry fees alone is more than the Annapolis event ever dreamed of having.

But the money from the entry fees of many 10K or 10-mile races is also paid out to the Kenyans and others who are brought in to win the race.

Thankfully, the Striders have not gone to such lengths with their event. They have left the Ten Mile Run for area people to win.

Hopefully, it will always be that way. The Annapolis area cannot hold the vast numbers of people that might come in if the local race was expanded as some of the others have been. The course on which the race is run cannot handle the huge numbers that run out for the bigger races.

Although the Annapolis Ten Mile Run remains "a local event" it has earned a reputation among the regional runners for being so very well run. That brings in some runners who might not otherwise trek to Annapolis to run here.

Seles' appearance excites tennis fans

NEW YORK (AP) — Monica Seles stood in the shade of the stairwell and paused, as if afraid to take the next step.

Above her, the crowd. Ahead, the court. In her mind, the memories.

"Monica, there are a lot of people up there who want to pour a lot of love on you," U.S. Open tournament director Steve DeVoe assured her.

They didn't know she was coming yesterday. No one outside her close circle did. She decided only the day before to join the tennis world in honoring the memory of Arthur Ashe and his Foundation for the Defeat of AIDS.

She couldn't play in the exhibition for charity, and she can't defend her two straight Open titles starting today. But she could take a stand just by showing up. And so she did.

Now on the stairs, she walked tentatively up into the brilliant sunlight, gaily dressed in a cherry-red striped blouse, a white ribbon in her dark hair, a nervous smile on her face.

And when Alan King, master of ceremonies, announced her immediately to the crowd, 13,000 fans rose, as DeVoe had predicted, "to pour a lot of love" on her.

They embraced her with their applause longer and more warmly than they did when she won the championships. They made her feel safe in New York.

"New York loves Monica Seles," King said as the crowd's long ovation finally waned.

Seles smiled, giggled, seemed almost embarrassed. And she looked, even in sunglasses, as if that applause was some of the best therapy she's received.

She sat beside Ashe's widow Jeanne and daughter Camera, signed autographs and, at one point, leaned over a railing from the president's box to exchange a kiss and hug with Jennifer Capriati.

"It's a very special day," Seles said. "I wanted to be here because I love Arthur and I want to support his Foundation for the Defeat of AIDS."

Seles, 19, wasn't even born when Ashe won the first U.S. title of the Open era in 1968. But she came to know about him and respect him, like most of the other stars at yesterday's benefit, more for his good works than his fine play.

Still, it wasn't easy to come here. Four months have passed since she'd last entered a tennis stadium. Four months since she was wheeled out, a knife wound in her back from a deranged fan obsessed with Steffi Graf.

When Seles arrived in Vail, Colo., for treatment, she talked about her fears of returning to a court.

"I'm sure I'll be thinking," she said then, "about the guy behind me — 'What are his intentions?'"

Now she was in a stadium again, in the stands instead of on a court. She didn't know when she'd hit a ball again, when she'd play again, and most importantly whether she'd ever be as good again.

But with the fans cheering her, and security guards all around, at least she looked unafraid.

Navratilova, at 36, has nothing to prove

Martina wants to enjoy playing in U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — At the age of 36 and with a record 165 tournament titles, Martina Navratilova knows her place in history and in this year's U.S. Open.

"I've been beyond proving anything for a long time now," the left-hander said. "This is a golden time and I'm just enjoying the ride."

She's also enjoying rewriting the record book, which changes almost every time she takes to the court. Navratilova is seeded third this year, a record 19th consecutive time she has been seeded in this tournament, 1993's final Grand Slam event. She had been tied with Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert for most years seeded and most successive years seeded.

When she took the court today against Gloria Pizzichini of Italy in a first-round match, Navratilova played in her 21st consecutive tournament, besting Virginia Wade's mark of 20. It will be her 103rd match in U.S. Open play, still 10 shy of Evert's career mark.

And while she has captured four U.S. Open titles, she hasn't been the final woman standing on the hard courts of the National Tennis Center since 1987 when she defeated Steffi Graf.

"I have to think that I'm capable of winning the big one... that I can win the U.S. Open," Navratilova said recently. "That's what I'm shooting for, that's what's in the back of my mind. But I really don't have any expectations other than to give it my best shot every single time I go out there."

"Sometimes it's good enough to win, sometimes it's not."

Graf, the No. 1 seed, was the first to take Stadium Court today, playing veteran Robin White. A two-time U.S. Open winner, Graf hasn't captured the crown since 1980, the year after she swept everything in sight and appeared ready to dominate women's tennis for years to come.

But along came Monica Seles, whose razor-sharp, grunt-accompanied groundstrokes bludgeoned everyone in her way as she grabbed the No. 1 ranking and seemingly all of the titles. But on April 30 in Hamburg, Germany, Seles was stabbed in the back by a spectator during a match and has yet to return to the court.

On Sunday, she returned to the U.S. Open, however, making her first appearance in public since the stabbing. On the court where she won the 1991 and 1992 women's singles titles, Seles joined the tennis world in memory of Arthur Ashe, the 1968 champion who died in February of an AIDS-related illness.

Smiling at courtside, Seles, now ranked No. 2 in the world but skipping the U.S. Open, waved to 13,000 fans who gave her a standing ovation. She sat beside Ashe's widow Jeanne and daughter Camera, signed autographs and, at one point, leaned over a railing from the president's box to exchange a kiss and hug with Jennifer Capriati.

"It's a very special day," said Seles, who scheduled a news conference for today. "I wanted to be here because I love Arthur and I want to support his Foundation for the Defeat of AIDS."

"I thought she showed a lot of guts coming here," said J. Howard "Bumpy" Frazer, chairman of the U.S. Open committee.

Seles, who flew up from her home in Sarasota, Fla., sat in a USTA office until the exhibition began. Then as she started up the stairway in the stadium, she hesitated a moment as if afraid of going further. Tournament director Stephen DeVoe reassured her.

"I said to her, 'Monica, there are a lot of people up there who want to pour a lot of love on you,'" DeVoe said.

The absence of Seles is the reason Navratilova is the No. 3 seed; she is ranked fourth in the world, a computer ranking she takes issue with.

"I'm the third best player in the world, I feel," she said. "I know that Arantxa (Sanchez Vicario of Spain) is ranked ahead of me, but I feel I'm a better player than she is, although I really haven't been able to prove it because we haven't played each other that much. But whatever — three or four — it doesn't matter."

"I am at the top and I don't have to prove anything. But I just like to be able to play the top players and beat them once in a while."

In 1973, when Navratilova played in her first U.S. Open, the top-seeded women were Billie Jean King and Margaret Court. They, like the top five men's seeds that year — Ilie Nastase, Stan Smith, Ashe, Rod Laver and Ken Rosewall — are all now enshrined in the International Tennis Hall of Fame.

Navratilova was seeded at the U.S. Open for the first time in 1975. The native of Czechoslovakia reached the semifinals, but made bigger headlines when she defected.

Ironically, the first time she reached the final at the National Tennis Center was in 1981, shortly after she gained her U.S. citizenship. She lost to Tracy Austin — another Hall of Famer.

"Just don't start calling me the missing link," she laughed. "I don't think I look 36 and I certainly don't act it."

"Technically, I have never been better. But you know the body is just not responding the way it used to. It's much more of an effort to just run down balls."

"It is a matter of how you win and how you lose. That's why some wins are more satisfactory than others and then some losses are more painful than others. But the bottom line is I want to win."

Pete Sampras' fine edge is missing, lost somewhere between the genteel ambiance of Wimbledon and the dense, smoggy pall that hangs heavily over the U.S. Open.

"I haven't been playing that well the last couple of weeks, but I should be OK," Sampras said after finishing a spirited one-hour practice session Saturday.

With his first match not until Tuesday, he has two more days to fine-tune his Grand Slam hopes and rid himself of some bad tiebreak memories acquired in his past three tournaments.

Allem grabs putter and title

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Guido Ianni's business will undoubtedly flourish at next year's World Series of Golf.

Ianni runs a makeshift club stand near the putting green at Firestone Country Club. It was there last Monday that he reached down in the large golf bags he uses for display cases and pulled out a putter to sell to Fulton Allem.

Allem turned that putter into a magic wand over the final 27 holes, shooting a startling 8-under-par 62 yesterday to coast to a 5-stroke victory over an elite winners-only field.

"It's like a piece of art," Allem said of the putter.

The $300,000 first-place check — and a 10-year exemption on the PGA Tour — easily covered the putter's $2,300 price tag. He finished at 10-under 270, playing the final 27 holes 10 under.

Allem's victory also continued a mastery of the tournament over the last decade by players from southern Africa. Denis Watson of Zimbabwe won in 1984 and was second the following year. David Frost of South Africa won in 1989 and Zimbabwe's Nick Price was sixth two years ago, tied for fifth last year and finished tied with defending champion Craig Stadler and Jim Gallagher Jr. this year for second behind Allem, also of South Africa. Allem, second in the World Series in 1987, didn't waste any time in overcoming a one-shot deficit over four others starting the day.

He chipped in from 60 feet for eagle on 2. After bogeying 4, he hit an 8-foot birdie putt at 5, a 60-footer at 7, a 5-footer at 8 and then holed a 10-foot putt for his fourth birdie in five holes at the par-4 9th.

"He didn't really give us a chance," Price said. "I can't believe that. He must have skipped out of a few holes. Did they check that?"

No, he played all 18. At the 11th he hit a sand wedge to 6 inches for another birdie. From there on, it was academic.

"I woke up with a mission this morning," said the current resident of Heathrow, Fla. "I said to myself it's not often you can get into a situation to get a 10-year exemption on the tour. You got to go out there and have a flat-out go. Don't hold back on anything. Just go for it. And I don't believe I left one putt short today. I had a go."

"You'd look up at the scoreboard and you'd be down six or seven shots," said Gallagher, who started the day tied with Greg Norman, David Edwards and Price for the lead. "I shot a 68 and got waxed."

Allem took as many shots on the first two holes as Greg Norman needed on the first hole. While Allem was going birdie-eagle, Norman opened with a double-bogey — and then finished the front side with another to fade out of contention. He finished with a 73 and ended up 10 shots back.

Vijay Singh shot a 66 to finish fifth at 277. Edwards closed with a 72 to stand at 279.

Price earned $149,333 and has $1,392,270 for the year, just $3,008 behind Tom Kite's all-time tour earnings record. Price, who has won four times this year, also added to his advantage over Paul Azinger and Norman for player of the year. Azinger never broke par and finished 24 shots behind.

Parent's solo homer and Hulet's RBI single in the seventh gave Baltimore a 5-0 lead. Baltimore added another run in the eighth on Anderson's sacrifice fly.

Bohanon is 1-2 with a 4.99 ERA in six starts this season.

"I didn't like what I saw today from our pitchers," Kennedy said. "We didn't pitch smart. Bohanon gives up a wild pitch with a runner on third. That's not pennant-winning baseball."

NOTES: Franco has a 14-game hitting streak. The Rangers have scored 686 runs. They scored 682 in the entire 1992 season. ... The Orioles have allowed double-figures in runs six times this month, the most in club history.

RUN

None of the other wheelchair competitors finished more than 26 minutes after Lee.

The runners were more closely bunched.

Mark Donohue was close on the heels of runner-up Clarke, while Mock, last year's winner, was another few seconds behind.

The first Annapolis runner to cross the finish line was James Garrett, who was ninth.

The field had runners from 10 to 76 entered, but neither the youngest nor oldest completed the race within two hours and 20 minutes.

One of the 70-plus entries was Glen Burne's Leo Salatti, who finished in two hours and seven minutes. He started the race with his son and grand daughter.

Despite the weather conditions, runners lauded the organizers for the number of water stops and availability of medical attention throughout the course.

"It was extremely well run, but it's always is," Moore said. "I've run this race for 10 years and I'll keep coming back. Now, of course, she's had a championship to defend."

GROSS

The Annapolis Ten Mile Run is as close to a professionally run event as anyone could imagine. Those who work for the successful staging of the event are as professional as what they do as anyone might carry out an avocation.

The Ten Mile Run is a refreshing sports event in an era when simply having area people competing against each other seems to be out of vogue.

Just in case anybody gets any ideas about inviting the world renowned Kenyahs or Nambians or Mexicans to compete in this event, take a hint: Don't do it. This event works. Leave it as it is.
